Keiko Nagao
KEK

Measuring dark matter distributions in the direct detection with nuclear emulsion

Direct detection of dark matter using nuclear emulsion is going to be planned. It is still in the research and development, however, is expected to have the directional detectability and relatively high sensitivity. In the talk, I will discuss the possibility to distinguish velocity distribution models of dark matter in the experiment.